

How to trap a Grass Goblin

Do not put up with finding stinky slime covering your lawn.
You should not have to hide your favourite gnomes.

Are YOU confused and frustrated by who is taking all of your finest roses?

Well, you simply cannot carry on like this. It sounds like you have a Grass Goblin problem, but do not worry! Follow these, helpful and easy to understand instructions and you will rid yourself of these pesky goblins for all.

Word of warning: Prior to reading these instructions, ensure that you are stilling in a safe place, away from any Carpet
Goblins; some may be camouflaged, so check carefully.

What you will need:

- An extra-large bunch of red or yellow roses (often sold at your local supermarket – these mustn't be green)
- 1 reinforced cage measuring approximately 8m x 8m – steel is an excellent material to use due to its strength (paper isn't so good)
- Rubber gloves (check you've got the right size but if not, they can be purchased at your local garden centre)
- Lots of leaves, twigs and foliage (if you can't get your hands on any, if in winter, chopping up a large Christmas tree will suffice)
- Magic padlock or rope which hasn't been used before

What to do:

First, put the cage in the centre of your garden and cover it with the leaves, twigs and foliage. Completely covering the cage is vital, as an intelligent Grass Goblin will soon spot a trap-they're pretty clever!

Secondly, place several of the roses into the cage and make a trail with the rest leading all the way into the cage. You mustn't rush this part.

Then, hide behind an object large enough to conceal yourself fully.

Following this, wait. Be patient. You'll wait until your Grass Goblin smells the sweet scent of the roses and eventually gives into the temptation and enters the cage.

Penultimately, once your goblin is inside close the cage door but make sure you wear your gloves, just in case the goblin decides to bite you! Secure the cage by locking it with your magic padlock or some strong rope. You've done it Well Done!

Finally, call the Minister of Goblin Disruption, who will come and remove your goblin, and return it to its rightful land.

TOP TIP

Professor Smug-A-Lot, from University of Goblinton, found that if a goblin becomes distressed, singing them a lullaby often helps to calm them. Alternatively, you may want to refer to the, how to care for your Grass Goblin instruction manual.

Conclusion

Finally, if you have followed these instructions carefully, you will be able to enjoy a Grass Goblin free day. Well Done!
