The British High King Vortigern faced danger from the Picts and Scots in the North and	sea raids from the Franks, Frisians, Saxons and Angles from the East.
In a bid to retain control, Historians believe that Vortigern asked two brothers called	Hengest and Horsa from Jutland (in modern day Denmark) to come to Britain and fight for him.
Vortigern let the brothers and their men live	on the Isle of Thanet in the Kingdom of Ceint.
However, the Jutes liked what they found in Britain and decided that they wanted to stay and	take land for themselves as it was rich and plentiful and the Britons could be easily defeated.
Soon more warriors and invaders began to settle	around Britain, pushing the Brits further and further to the West!
These invaders are known to us as The Anglo-Saxons because	the two biggest invading tribes were the Angles and the Saxons.
Other invaders were the Jutes, Franks and Frisians.	They came from the modern places of Germany, Holland and Denmark.
Vortigern and other British kings invited the chiefs of	the Jutes, Angles and Saxons to make peace.
However, the invaders did not respect the peace terms and	killed all of the British chiefs except for Vortigern.
This became known as the	Treachery of the Long Knives.
Some Britons accepted their new rulers, but others	travelled West to join the remaining British kingdoms.
