This next passage is very different to the story so far, not only because of what it is about, but also in the way that appears on the page. This is something the author does in several places in the book. Here's the first two pages of Chapter 7;

Remember, the last thing that happened in Chapter six was Varjak falling from the tree; " – and everything went black."

What do you think is the first clue that this chapter is a little different from the first 6?

How long does it take for Varjak to realise who is talking to?

When Varjak wakes up, where do you think he will be?

What role do you think Jalal will play in the rest of the story?

Is he a ghost? Does he just exist in Varjak's dreams or imagination?
